The Next Generation of Ideas for Maternal Health

(WASHINGTON, DC – February 17, 2001) The Maternal Health Task Force at EngenderHealth and Ashoka's Changemakers have launched "Healthy Mothers, Strong World: The Next Generation of Ideas for Maternal Health", a global competition to identify inspiring changemakers with solutions that will transform the maternal health field.

Maternal health is gaining prominence on the global development agenda but needs a new generation of professionals to sustain the momentum and end the cycle of maternal death and disability. The Changemakers online platform will identify 3 organizations along with 16 young leaders from around the world, Young Champions of Maternal Health, to discuss their ideas and projects, receive training, and get feedback and advice from maternal health experts at the Maternal Health Change Summit in India on August 30 – September 1, 2010.

The young leaders identified through the competition will develop their innovative ideas during 9-month mentorships with seasoned Ashoka Fellows working in the field of maternal health immediately after the Change Summit. During this time, the Young Champions will have access to maternal health experts through the Maternal Health Task Force and resources to further develop their ideas and projects. "The MHTF is eager to foster new ideas coming from the next generation of maternal health leaders," said Dr. Ann K. Blanc, Director of the MHTF at EngenderHealth. All Young Champions will receive a monthly stipend and 100% financial support for travel, accommodation, insurance, and visa costs. The innovations and projects that emerge from the Young Champions Program will be publicized widely.

"The health of all mothers is moving to the forefront of the world's agenda, so this is an opportune time to identify the next generation that will make innovative ideas work on a large scale," says Charlie Brown, Changemakers' Executive Director.

Visit Changemakers now to nominate an inspiring Young Champion with a groundbreaking solution, enter your own initiative, or submit your own application by March 17, 2010 to become a Changemaker for Maternal Health.
